There was almost daily towed-target practice. The target was pulled by a MIG-15 with auxiliary fuel tanks and was attacked by other MIG-15's, some of them also with auxiliary tanks. On 29 March, MIG-15's did some night flying over the sea, with each flight lasting about 30 minutes.

Eight 76-mm anti-aircraft guns were emplaced in the southern part of the field. Three 27-mm guns on carriages were located in the northeast corner near the boundary.

A radar installation with curved antennae still stood in the southeastern corner. During air activity, a signal truck with broom-shaped antenna and a rotating cross-shaped antenna was placed near the take-off area.
